

Main character enters a cave after hearing that someone had found some kind of new life deep in the cave. He starts exploring the cave. In the beginning he finds a pot or something human made every now and then. The deeper he goes the stranger the things he finds become. After a while of exploring the cave he finds a cave that has crystals everywhere. The cave behind him collapses and traps him inside. He starts hearing weird noises and eventually spots some kind of half dead luminating creature approaching him. The creature seems to be aggressive. He tries to defend himself with his knife but it doesn't seem to be able to affect the creature. He finds a crystal sword that also luminates and seems to be made of the same crystals as the creatures.

This is it, the cave I've heard so much about. Apparently there is some kind of new mineral somewhere in this cave but that can't be, if there really is a new mineral it would have definitely been discovered already. No, my main goal in this is not to bust this myth. I am no miner after all, I'm an archaeologist. Maybe I could even find out what happened to the other archaeologists. So far about half of the previous archaeologists have returned. All of them did find something that's definitely worth the risk, but none of them went very far into the cave. Maybe it's even better down there. After exploring the cave for a while I finally started to find things but sadly very similar things had all been brought to the surface by other archaeologists so I kept going. Not long after I finally found something, old records, I put it in my bag and went along looking for more. I didn't find much for a while, but after a while I saw a strange glow coming from deeper in the cave. It felt like it was calling me to come over. I couldn't resist anymore. I had lost control over my own legs. I saw weird glowing crystals which I had never seen before. right after i stepped into the part with the crystals the cave behind me collapsed. Even though I had regained control over my own legs I panicked. I spotted spiders all over the cave, but not just regular spiders, some of them seemed to be infected by these weird crystals. I tried to hide but they quickly noticed me. I didn't have anything to defend myself so I started to look around for something, anything to help me. Luckily I spotted some kind of battle axe. I hesitated at first because it looked like it was made from the same crystals that infected the spiders and it glowed in a similar way. I quickly noticed that I didn't have much of a choice and grabbed the battle axe to defend myself and hopefully get out of this cave...